Problem Statement

Author: Nicholas Lester

Problem Statement:

- A trend among United State companies has shown a lack of support and care for the significant decline of mental wellbeing and care for the daily lives of employees.

Who is Experiencing the Problem?

- Anyone who currently resides in the United States and works for any sort of company can experience this issue however it is more prevalent and very physically inducive jobs and computer desk jobs.

What is the Problem?

- The problem is that many of these large companies or even smaller companies' upper management is so out of touch with the average worker, they can expect things that are scientifically impossible in reports, projects or even in just the application process, they push the idea of living, breathing and eating work which is not how people can live. Denying remote work, making people come in on holidays, denying vacation days etc. are all results of this issue.

Why does it matter?

- The issue matters quite a bit as most people are employed, especially by large corporations. Every single person can experience this issue and it's something that's completely out of their control as the everyday average man laborer. Many have expressed distain regarding the decisions of their bosses which results in many people becoming depressed and unmotivated in their craft. It also leads to many companies going under and many unemployed.